

How can volunteering act as a tool for employment? How can the volunteering experience become a space to develop employability? This online course answers these questions both from a theoretical and practical approach.

Objectives:

- To reflect the role of volunteering in the generation of employment opportunities.
- To promote volunteering as a tool for employment.
- To identify the experience of volunteering as a space for developing employability.
- To share best practices on volunteering and youth employability in different European countries.

Dates: 23 October – 4th December 2014 (30 hours)

Addressed to: NGO's and associations employees and leaders. Public servers. Other experts.

Registration limit: 17/10/2014

School: Fundació Pere Tarrés

Price: The seminar is free.

Other information:

- The instruction language is English.
- The school responsible for training will not consider any firm that does not submit all the registration data requested.
- The maximum number of seats available is 30 awarded by order of registration.
- The organization reserves the right to suspend the seminars that have a number of students below 15.
- The training entitles all the students with a diploma.

This course is promoted within the European Volunteering Capital program. The course is also included in the framework of the recruitment program of the Implementation Plan derived from VERSO Project.

This activity is financed with public funds. We ask a commitment charge; if after enrolling you cannot attend, please notify it.

To register follow the link.

Return to the main page